about
« THE VACCINE ADJUVANTS : A DISPUTED ISSUE »

For many decades, in particular aluminium salts have been sometimes added in vaccines. The adjuvants' role is to stimulate an immune response.

According to some scientists, the safety profile of these adjuvants is excellent, notably because they help to reduce the frequency and severity of local inflammation reactions. On the other hand, for more than 15 years, some studies have been insisting on the existence of links between these adjuvants and some diseases and considered that the long term effects from aluminium salts should be analyzed.

The present public hearing will aim at organizing discussions between the main stakeholders about the different aspects of these controversies.
