Cet important accord-cadre fixe le cadre juridique nécessaire à la réalisation par les pays occidentaux signataires d'actions d'assistance technique permettant de procéder, dans des conditions de sécurité satisfaisantes, au démantèlement des sous-marins et des brise-glace nucléaires hors service de la flotte russe et de maîtriser les conséquences environnementales désastreuses résultant de l'actuelle absence de traitement des importantes quantités de déchets radioactifs et de combustible nucléaire usé stockées dans les bases navales du Nord-ouest de la Russie. Ce programme de coopération peut également comprendre des actions de sûreté nucléaire. L'accord prévoit la fiscalité des fonds débloqués au titre du programme, le statut et le régime fiscal applicables aux personnels étrangers engagés pour ces actions d'assistance (art. 9 et 12) et est assorti d'un protocole fixant le cadre judiciaire de la prise en charge par la Fédération de Russie des dommages de toute nature pouvant résulter des actions menées dans le cadre du programme. En regard tant à son importance notamment diplomatique et à son contenu, en particulier judiciaire, cet accord paraît devoir être regardé comme de nature législative, au sens de l'article 88-4 de la Constitution.

EXPOSÉ DES MOTIFS

Historique: la situation dans le nord-ouest de la Russie

Le nord-ouest de la Russie est particulièrement menacé par d'énormes quantités de combustible nucléaire usé et de déchets radioactifs qui trouvent leur origine dans les activités tant du passé (déchets historiques) que du présent. Les principales sources de déchets sont les sous-marins nucléaires. Parmi les autres, il convient de citer les brise-glaces nucléaires, les bases techniques flottantes stockant du combustible nucléaire usé, les centres de recherche civils et militaires, notamment les installations de retraitement, et l'utilisation de radionucléides en médecine ainsi que dans la recherche et l'industrie.

Deux tiers de tous les navires militaires russes appartiennent à la Flotte du nord. Au total, 253 navires militaires nucléaires ont été construits au cours de la période 1955-2001, dont 248 étaient des sous-marins et le reste des bâtiments de surface. Quelque 180 d'entre eux ont été mis hors service, dont plus de 110 provenant de la Flotte du Nord. Les navires de la Flotte du Nord qui ont été mis hors service contiennent plus de 200 réacteurs nucléaires (la plupart des sous-marins ont deux réacteurs à bord). Nombre d'entre eux renferment encore du combustible nucléaire usé.

Les sous-marins ont été et sont encore ravitaillés et révisés dans plusieurs bases navales implantées dans des baies situées entre Mourmansk et Arkhangelsk. Nombre d'entre elles ne sont plus en exploitation, mais contiennent toujours du combustible nucléaire usé ainsi que des déchets radioactifs. Les deux bases côtières qui contiennent les plus grandes quantités de combustible nucléaire usé et de déchets radioactifs se trouvent dans les baies d'Andreeva et, dans une moindre mesure, de Gremikha.

Aucune des bases navales ne dispose d'installations adéquates pour le traitement et le stockage du combustible nucléaire usé et des déchets radioactifs. De nombreuses bases renferment de grandes quantités de matières radioactives. Les sites de stockage existants sont pour la plupart pleins et certains laissent déjà échapper des matières radioactives dans l'environnement. Les bases étant situées le long des côtes, le risque de contamination de la mer est notable.

Les brise-glaces du nord-ouest de la Russie sont exploités par la Murmansk Shipping Company (MSCO), qui est également responsable de leur ravitaillement et de leur maintenance. Le combustible nucléaire usé est envoyé à Mayak pour y être retraité et les déchets radioactifs sont stockés par la MSCO.

Le navire de maintenance le Lepse – une base technique flottante abritant du combustible usé fortement détérioré provenant du brise-glace Lenin – est à quai dans le port de Mourmansk. Le secteur industriel avait lancé un projet de décontamination, mais il a été abandonné, essentiellement en raison d'un financement insuffisant. Le Lepse appartient à la MSCO. Il a été construit en 1936, coulé au cours de la Seconde guerre mondiale, puis renfloué et utilisé jusqu'en 1981 comme installation de stockage de combustible nucléaire usé provenant de brise-glaces. Il a également servi à transporter des déchets radioactifs d'Atomflot jusqu'à la partie orientale de Novaya Zemlya, où ils ont été déversés dans la mer. Il contient environ 640 assemblages usés transférés des réacteurs du brise-glace à propulsion nucléaire Lenin, victime d'un accident en 1966. Aujourd'hui, les radiations s'échappant de la section de stockage du Lepse sont largement supérieures aux normes acceptables.

La réaction de la communauté internationale: l'accord-cadre PMENR

Compte tenu de l'échelle planétaire du problème, il est apparu clairement, au milieu des années 90, que des actions bilatérales et multilatérales concertées étaient nécessaires et devaient se concentrer sur les problèmes de sûreté nucléaire les plus aigus, notamment dans le domaine du traitement et du stockage des déchets nucléaires et du combustible nucléaire usé. Un groupe de contact composé d'experts a été créé en 1996 sous les auspices de l'AIEA pour coordonner l'aide internationale à la Russie dans le domaine de la gestion des déchets radioactifs. Sa tâche principale était de mettre en évidence les domaines dans lesquels le financement international permettrait de réduire les risques de radiation découlant de la gestion insatisfaisante du combustible nucléaire usé et des déchets radioactifs dans le nord-ouest de la Russie. La Commission et certains États membres ont pris part aux travaux de ce groupe de contact dès le début.

Des donateurs bilatéraux ont commencé à aider la Fédération de Russie en évaluant la situation et en s'attaquant au problème dans le cadre de plusieurs accords-cadres bilatéraux et multilatéraux. La Commission a soutenu une série de projets et d'analyses de faisabilité concernant les bases navales de Gremikha et d'Andreeva ainsi qu'un projet préliminaire concernant le Lepse, mais la communauté internationale dans son ensemble estime que seuls des efforts conjoints plus vigoureux pourraient permettre de remédier aux problèmes de manière satisfaisante.

En réponse, les participants à la réunion du Conseil euro-arctique de la mer de Barents (y compris la Russie), qui s'est tenue le 5 mars 1999 à Bodø (Norvège), ont signé une déclaration faisant état de leur intention de faciliter et d'élargir la coopération dans le domaine des projets sur la sûreté de la gestion du combustible nucléaire usé et des déchets radioactifs. Ils ont lancé le «programme environnemental multilatéral dans le domaine nucléaire en Fédération de Russie» (PMENR) et ont recommandé la conclusion rapide d'un accord-cadre en la matière afin de surmonter les obstacles à la mise en œuvre du projet. L'accord-cadre comprend un protocole concernant les actions en justice, les procédures judiciaires et l'indemnisation. La Commission a pris part activement aux discussions sur le PMENR et a reçu du Conseil un mandat de négociation en avril 2000.

Les négociations portant sur la conclusion de l'accord-cadre ont eu lieu de 2000 à 2003. Le texte final de l'accord-cadre a été signé à Stockholm en mai 2003 par la Communauté européenne, la Communauté européenne de l'énergie atomique, l'Allemagne, la Belgique, le Danemark, la Fédération de Russie, la Finlande, les Pays-Bas, la Norvège, le Royaume-Uni et la Suède. Les États-Unis ont signé l'accord-cadre, mais pas le protocole. Le texte original a été déposé à l'Agence de l'OCDE pour l'énergie nucléaire et au ministère des affaires étrangères de la Fédération de Russie.

Bien que l'accord-cadre PMENR puisse s'appliquer de manière provisoire à compter de la date de signature, il est soumis à ratification, acceptation ou approbation par les parties, conformément à l'article 18 relatif à l'entrée en vigueur, la durée, le retrait et l'expiration. La totalité des États membres de l'Union européenne ayant signé l'accord-cadre ont désormais déposé leurs instruments de ratification auprès des dépositaires, le dernier à l'avoir fait étant le Royaume-Uni, qui a ratifié l'accord-cadre en avril 2006. La Communauté européenne est désormais en mesure de conclure l'accord-cadre PMENR.

Conclusion

- 1) La Commission propose que le Conseil adopte la proposition ci-jointe de décision relative à la conclusion d'un accord-cadre pour un programme multilatéral environnemental dans le domaine nucléaire en Fédération de Russie et de son protocole concernant les actions en justice, les procédures judiciaires et l'indemnisation.
- 2) La Commission informe le Conseil de la conclusion, au nom de la Communauté européenne de l'énergie atomique, de l'accord-cadre pour un programme multilatéral environnemental dans le domaine nucléaire en Fédération de Russie et de son protocole concernant les actions en justice, les procédures judiciaires et l'indemnisation.

The Depositaries shall fulfil their duties in accordance with Article 77 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties of 23 May 1969 and shall consult each other in the fulfilment of their duties.
